Category:Software using the.NET Framework Category:Microsoft softwareQ: Is 'do' required in the result sentence of the conditional construction? Are both of these sentences acceptable? If I were a good girl, I would have brought cookies. If I were a good girl, cookies would have been brought. A: In short, yes, either is OK and they're semantically equivalent. If I were a good girl... And I was the good girl I would have brought cookies. is perfectly fine - note that you could also have said that I am a good girl and that I would have brought cookies is a more formal or literary way of saying If I were a good girl, cookies would have been brought. Q: Complexity analysis - decision tree vs. neural network Is it possible to perform a complexity analysis on a system that uses a neural network versus one that uses a decision tree? Specifically, I am working on a self-driving car that relies on neural networks (e.g. ConvNets, LSTMs) for perception. After picking up a person in the middle of the road or driving through a parking lot, the car should drive around the person or park in a spot that is safe. The problem arises when the system fails to understand what it sees, resulting in a crash. Is there any way to analyse the complexity of such a system? I have been looking around the internet for articles on this topic. The Google results tend to be about neural networks. A: There can be many ways to analyze the complexity of a system. The way to do it is to look at the amount of time it takes to do an operation. For example, look at the amount of time that it takes to do an operation on a neural network versus a decision tree, and then look at how many operations they do. If one neural network does fewer operations than another, then the system using the neural network has a lower computational complexity than the other system. Q: How to build a RDBMS on an IIS7.5 HTTP server? I'm building a new server for a client, and he wants the entire server to be a RDBMS (not ASP.NET MVC) and I'm trying to figure out how to do that. I found this link and I'm doing
